Cultural Caravan TV presents a spotlight on the National Black Programming Consortium (NBPC) and its latest production entitled, 180 Days: Hartsville. The NBPC develops, produces and funds content about the Black experience for public media outlets, including PBS and PBS.org, BlackPublicMedia.org and other public media outlets. Founded in 1979, NBPC produces AfroPop: The Ultimate Cultural Exchange documentary series and manages the community engagement project Public Media Corps (PMC). On this episode, we will interview Kay Shaw, the Director of Strategic Engagement at NBPC and Jacquie Jones, the former Executive Director of NBPC. Ms. Jones will discuss a new NBPC film which she has Co-Directed entitled, 180 Days: Hartsville. Join us for another informative and provocative discussion about the sustainability of Black media and educational initiatives on Sunday, April 5 at 5:30pm on Channel 25 and Channel 22.

Cultural Caravan TV can be seen throughout the five boroughs, Long Island, Westchester County as well as parts of New Jersey and Connecticut via on-air broadcasts, cable, and satellite stations on Channels 25 and 22. In addition, Cultural Caravan TV can also be seen throughout the week on various community access TV stations. Check out our website at www.ccptv for a full listing of stations and air times. Don't miss this memorable episode! If you are not home, be sure to set the DVR or recorder.

We appreciate your support and encourage you to continue tuning in and telling a friend about the show.
